Two new trading card games attempt to go in surprisingly different directions. (1) Xeko uses kids' fascination with trading cards to teach them about endangered animals and ecosystems. This is hands-down the most beautifully-designed game I've ever seen. Kids ("agents") strategize in order to create the strongest "Xeko-systems" by playing their cards. Along the way, they learn facts about endangered species and the habitats in which they live. Even better, 4% of the proceeds go to Conservation International.
